The Rev. David R. Graham
December 20, 2009

The nation has been destroyed by her national security infrastructure.

Her system of secrets destroyed her.

Democratic society depends absolutely, as all know, on a well-informed citizenry with tastes sufficiently refined (educated) to discriminate between what is good for individual and whole together and what is not and to have opportunity to select the former and reject the latter.

Those essential conditions of a democratic society (education and choice) do not exist in what used to be the United States.

Education was killed by the system of secrets created, ostensibly, to secure the nation.

The nation is dead and being buried as we watch.

There is no resurrecting or resuscitating her.

It is a post-educated, unrefined, brutish world.
