

THEOLOGICAL GEOGRAPHY

May 1, 2009

Eilean Donan Castle
Justly famous for the beauty its restoration, Eilean Donan (Scottish Gaelic for Island of Donan) is an island in Loch Duich in the western Highlands of Scotland. It is connected to the mainland by a footbridge and lies about half a mile from the village of Dornie. Eilean Donan is named after St Donan,

Polymerizing Principles

By The Rev. David R. Graham

The question, “Whither sentiment expressed in the Tea Party movement?”, is uppermost in minds. Arthur C. Brooks of the American Enterprise Institute is among these. The caring posit that focus on agreed principles, not partisan politics or party formation, is of the essence.

Napolean said, “The moral is to the material as three is to one.” The moral case for freedom and self-reliance is more powerful than the material case for pocketbook self-interest.

Concurring with this observation, I made comment today and offered therein a substantial suggestion on Dan Riehl’s Riehl World View.

I suggested the following principles in polymerization of the Tea Party movement sentiment:

- National Sovereignty
- International Responsibility
- Economic Liberty
- Social Independence
- Moral Participation

A polymerization of these principles would reestablish either the Republican or the Democratic parties or establish a new party, such as, using Bill Safire’s phrase, a Libertarian Conservative party.

It would also renew and restore the structure and spirit of the United States of America.

Polymerizing Principles

By The Rev. David R. Graham

