

THEOLOGICAL GEOGRAPHY

March 25, 2009

Dumbartonshire,
Scotland
The River Leven, six miles long, connecting the River Clyde with Loch Lomond. The Leven is the second fastest flowing river in Scotland, after the River Spey, which lies in Moray south of Inverness in the northeast of the country.

The Ulster-Scots Words For The Family

By The Rev. David R. Graham

If the Ulster-Scot backbone of the United States could be weened from biblical literalism to biblical symbolism, the range of its operation would be dramatically increased and the field for its creative power dramatically expanded.

Weening Ulster-Scots from biblical literalism to biblical symbolism would be comparable to straightening the backbone of a man still noble and stubbornly active despite being bent over by calcification or paralysis.

The effect would be dramatic, salutary beyond description, first for Ulster-Scots themselves and then for the nation as whole, whose existence depends absolutely on the functions and creations of their spirit.

Eadem Mutata Resurgo

Jakob Bernoulli (1654-1705)

Comments

THEOLOGICAL GEOGRAPHY

March 25, 2009

Dumbarton, Scotland
Dumbarton Castle on the River Clyde overlooking Dumbarton, Scotland,
where the River Leven joins the River Clyde and its estuary.

The Engine Of Evolution In Appreciation Of Beauty

By The Rev. David R. Graham

Scripture (St. Jerome) is the engine of evolution, not adaptation (Lamarck), not argumentation (Darwin), although both of those functions operate to effect in the process called evolution. Evolution, also, is accompanied by devolution and involution. Life is a three-strand thread.

Where there is being, there is the logos of being.
Parmenides.

Brahma Kavi. God is the Poet. The Poet is God. The Word is one. Universe turns to one because it is Scripture, Word, Evolution/Involution, One, Logos.

Comments